Dear Tracey Smith,

I'd like to register my sense of despair at hearing of these road projects.

The science is clear that the more we 'optimise' our road network, the more cars there are on that network: <https://bettertransport.org.uk/roads-nowhere/induced-traffic>

Governments and corporations have nearly damaged the Earth to the point it can no longer support our civilisation. As I'm sure you know, the IPCC report warns of unimaginable suffering if we don't Act Now.

Would you agree that the money for this project should instead be spent on better public transport, active travel and community car sharing, as part of a transition to a zero-carbon economy?

I know there is some local opposition to the project, so I'd imagine there is the possibility of Nonviolent Resistance if it were to go ahead.

Cofion cynnes / Kind regards,
